OCTOBER 2020

You're Wearing That?

Fashion is a funny thing. In October many of us make plans for outrageous costumes to scare or shock or amuse our friends and onlookers. But these sartorial faux pas(es?) are ones for the books. Also, try changing the emphasized word when you say the following sentence to show varying degrees and shades of disgust: What exactly are you wearing?

- The Hobble Skirt - Also known as the 'speed limit skirt'. "Hobbling" is a term for tying an animal's legs together to prevent it from running away. In the early 20th century, the hobble skirt attempted to do the same to women. It was designed specifically to slow women down and prevent them from taking large steps.
 - The Codpiece - Popular in the 15th and 16th centuries. They were made out of a variety of materials - sometimes even carved from ahem wood - and served to make men feel good about their members.
 - The Macaroni - The most notable element of macaroni fashion was a huge wig with the tiny hat on top, but it also included flashy waistcoats, bright stockings, and fancy buckled shoes. The tiny hat was sometimes a feather, as you may know, like Yankee-doodle who went to town riding on a pony.
- ⇒
- The Crinoline - Also called a 'hoop skirt'. Not just a flamboyant fashion statement, but a true danger to the wearer. In the 19th century, there were several high-profile deaths by skirt fire including the poet Henry Wadsworth Longfellow's wife and Oscar Wilde's two half sisters.
 - Blackened Teeth - In early Tudor England, sugar wasn't readily available. By the time that Elizabeth the First came around, it was everywhere (though at a very high cost), and the Virgin Queen had a thing for sweets. As a result, her teeth were black and decaying, and some folks even complained that it was hard to understand her. Though Elizabeth's teeth were a product of a sweet tooth (and a whole lot of neglect), they also sparked a short-lived fashion trend in England: Women purposefully blackened their teeth to prove that they had enough money to buy sugar.

Are We Thinking About Food Wrong?

- * Potatoes make French fries, chips, gnocchi, and vodka. It's like the other vegetables aren't even trying.
- * We eat pizza from the inside out.
- * Apple sauce is baby food that we never grow out of.
- * As a child, every stop for fast food is a victory. As an adult, every stop for fast food is a defeat.
- * A spoon is a small bowl on a stick that we use to eat from slightly larger bowls.
- * If milkshakes are just smoothies with milk, and smoothies are just cold fruit flavored soup, and soup is just vegetable and meat flavored tea, does that somehow mean that my ice cream sundae is just deconstructed health food?
- * When you look at the contents of your fridge, you are literally looking at your future body.
- * The ocean could be considered a very weak gravy, if there is even one molecule of gravy in it.
- * We eat salt because someone in history decided to lick a rock, and found it tasty.

In Other News

*To prevent the further spread of the disease, the seven dwarves have been advised that, as of today, they can only meet in groups of six. One of them is not Happy.

*Liar, liar, pants on fire. If this really did happen, watching the news would be a lot more fun.

Life expectancy would grow by leaps and bounds if green vegetables smelled as good as bacon
